P. P. & L. Pushing Industries of Area

Starting another step in a continuing drive to promote the products of the Columbia basin area, a new and enlarged edition of Pacific Power & Light company's directory of manufacturing and processing plants located in its territory has just come off the press and is ready for distribution, according to R. P. Kinne, local agent for the company.

The directory, attractively bound and well illustrated, will be placed in the hands of purchasing agents of large concerns throughout the nation, according to H. W. Derry, manager of the Pacific company's new industries department, under whose direction the directory was compiled.

Such a commodity index of the area is particularly timely now because sudden demands of the national defense program have exhausted many normal sources of supply and purchasing agents frequently are hard pressed to find new ones, Derry pointed out. This gives the Pacific northwest a fine opportunity to establish itself as a dependable new source.

"By placing this ready directory of products directly in the hands of men who do the buying, we are attempting to make it easy for them to use the products of this region. Our idea is to have the answer to the purchasing agent's question, 'Now, where can I get this product?' in his hands even before he can ask it."

More than 80 classes of products are indexed in the directory, running from agates to awnings, blankets to bulbs, cans to coal stokers, draperies to drugs, filters to fishing tackle, and so on through the alphabet. Nearly 500 producers, manufacturers and processors, with their products, covering most of the 130 communities served by the Pacific company, are listed.
