DRIEST MARCH

With precipitation of .65 inch reported by Len L. Gilliam, government observer, for March, a new record dry for many years was recorded. The month went moistureless until the very end when a few showers ushered in other showers for the start of April. Both February and March were short in precipitation, Mr. Gilliam reported, and reports from the timbered area show a very low snow supply that bodes ill for irrigating water later in the season. Crops generally, to date, are not suffering as a good supply of reserve moisture is in the ground, and the new wheat is presenting the best appearance in several years, stands being generally heavy and free from weeds.
