Shucked Clams, Clean Crabs Flavor Best

Razor clams to be canned retain a finer flavor when they are shucked mechanically instead of having the shell opened with boiling water, according to tests conducted at the branch food laboratory operated by the Oregon State college experiment station at Astoria. Where clams are to be preserved by freezing, use of zero rather than lower temperatures results in better texture and flavor, it was also found.

Clams, crabs, sole, flounder, sea perch, salmon, salmon cheeks, and halibut are some of the seafoods being experimented with in an effort to find practical marketing methods for more of Oregon's marine wealth. Promising results have already been obtained in inhibiting the action of bacteria in kippered fish and in preserving crab meat by freezing. In handling crabs it has been found best to remove the back and clean out the alimentary tract with water under high pressure before the crabs are cooked.

Tar Weed Seeds Injurious to Stock

Screenings which contain a considerable amount of tar weed seeds should not be fed to swine, horses or cattle, for the tar weed seed may poison these animals, reports the state department of agriculture animal division.

Hog losses due to this cause have been experienced from time to time in eastern Oregon wheat districts and also quite frequently in the Willamette valley. Screenings with tar weed seed come from grain that has been grown in the Inland Empire region and some screening feeds come from the larger mills. They should not be fed in large amounts without other supplementary feeds. Symptoms of the poisoning in swine and horses are due to destruction of liver tissue. Animals show a severe anemia, symptoms of jaundice and in general present a runty appearance.

More Eggs to be Asked of Farms To Meet Demands

A nation-wide drive to produce every egg possible from laying flocks this spring has just been announced at Washington, D. C., as a part of the program to increase the production of certain concentrated foods while holding down the output of staple export crops such as wheat, corn, and tobacco.

The program fits in well with the suggestions made throughout Oregon this spring by poultry specialists at Oregon State college, who recommend that egg producers hold their flocks to the maximum of present housing facilities, and that ample feed be used to insure maximum production. Neither the national nor state situation, however, warrants expansion in permanent new housing, according to Secretary of Agriculture Claud Wickard and the Oregon poultry specialists.

Eggs have been included among a few foods such as dairy products, pork, and chickens for meat, the production of which is to be encouraged for the next two years. These foods will be needed in increased amounts in this country as industrial payrolls are stepped up, and they are the easiest foods to export under the present program of American aid to nations resisting aggression.

While corn is the feed expected to be used in greatest volume in carrying out this program, wheat will receive the benefit throughout the western states particularly. Research carried on at Oregon State college in the last few years has shown that wheat is suitable and even superior feed grain for all types of livestock. It already forms the chief ingredient of Oregon poultry feeds and the proportion of wheat can be increased whenever it is cheaper than other grains, according to tests made at O. S. C.

The Surplus Marketing administration has arranged to support the market on the types of food mentioned in order to maintain prices profitable to the producer. Average levels aimed at are eggs, 22c; pork, $9 per hundredweight; chickens, 15c per pound, and dairy products, basis of 31c per pound of butter—all prices figured at Chicago.

Flying Cadets' Pay No Fiction of Movies

No, Uncle Sam has not gone into the movie plot business of fabulous success stories when he declares, "United States Army Flying Cadets are paid $75 a month and are allowed one dollar a day for rations. They are also provided free of charge with uniforms, living accommodations, and medical care." It's a fact, according to Lt. Col. B. H. Hensley, Oregon district recruiting officer.

Moreover the training received by the lucky lads who can meet the requirements for this particular class of service is equal to a $25,000 scholarship. When they have completed their courses they are commissioned as second lieutenants at $205 a month, and even a Hollywood plot couldn't laugh that one off.

Any unmarried Oregon Lochinvar who'd like to go riding out of the west into a $205 job has a chance to become a Flying Cadet, providing he is between the ages of 20 and 26, sound of limb and has two years of college training or is able to pass an educational examination. Applications are available at any army recruiting station, according to Colonel Hensley, who also pointed out that the air corps is now undertaking the greatest expansion program in the history of the United States Army.

CARBURETOR CARE
Carburetors of present day cars seldom need adjustment, but whenever they do a competent mechanic should be consulted, according to the emergency road service of the Oregon State Motor association. Trouble blamed on the carburetor may be due to some other cause, such as ignition.
