'Cy' Aiken Sees Lively Business in Prospect

That the United States is a-booming from defense activity is the assertion of Cyrus W. Aiken, eldest son of Mrs. Lillie Aiken, on a visit here Saturday after a recent tour of the east. "Cy," as his old-time Heppner friends know him, is now of Portland and Boise, Idaho, and represents the Blitz-Weinhard company.

Cy went to Detroit to get a new car, took in the inauguration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, and saw many of the leading industrial cities on the route home. Signs of activity noted include two big new General Motors buildings at Flint, construction of another big G. M. plant in Chicago, building of a munitions plant at Kansas City which will employ 25,000 men, new air base at Fort Riley, Kan., besides the munitions depot and air bases in our own vicinity. All the big cities, and smaller ones too, were humming, Cy said.

At Fort Riley he protested army buying of Argentina beef to a major, and was told, "You darned fool, you wouldn't get coffee to drink today if we didn't buy some beef down there," which gave him a new slant on the beef question.

After describing the many signs of activity, Cy asserted: "I'm telling you this country is going places. And after the war is over this nation is going to send men to all the countries of the world to stamp out fifth columnists, Fascism, Naziism and the rest of those isms and establish a standard of democracy throughout the world that will stand. I'm more American than I've ever been, and I've always been a patriotic American."

Joe Louis-Buddy Baer Fight Pictures!

- The clarity of the photography and the preciseness of expression on the in-fighting has been equalled only in simulated films of this kind. This picture's a natural piece of entertainment.
- Some may be attracted to the picture by the newspaper controversy over whether Joe Louis, the champion, delivered an after-the-bell blow in the final round of the bout, but it will take the sharpest of ears to catch the clang of the timekeeper's clarion.
- Junior Baer, brother of Max, gives a whirlwind account of himself, demonstrating what sports writers call a "heart" but which the more precise gentry define as courage—par excellence.

— And a little girl talked to her mother

A young telephone customer wanted to reach her mother, who was a nurse in a hospital. The telephone operator by dint of special effort located the mother, brought her to the telephone. . . . Later the young customer's signal light again appeared on the switchboard. The operator answered and a happy little voice explained, "I'm hugging the telephone!"

Bringing folks together

Though an average of more than 79 million telephone conversations per day are handled by the Bell System, each one is an individual transaction. And telephone people try to treat it as such.

The service seeks to be friendly and helpful as well as technically efficient.
