Pedestrian Protection — Channelizing Islands Help

City officials in Oregon, confronted with a hazard to pedestrians caused by unusually wide streets or highways, are considering measures to make it safer for persons who must walk across these busy thoroughfares, according to information received at the office of the secretary of state.

In several small Oregon cities where principal highways cut thru town, it is necessary for pedestrians to walk across these routes to reach their homes. Sometimes school children must cross them to reach school. Safety islands in the center of these wide thoroughfares help solve the problem and in some instances, junior safety patrols are used to help younger children cross in safety. These patrols sometimes are assisted by regular police.

Whenever crossing wide, busy streets or highways, pedestrians are urged to exercise extra precaution, even when safety islands are in use.

Wanted—Ford 4-cyl. truck. GT-103. 23-24.
