Mr. and Mrs. Lee Howell and Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Barlow returned home Monday from a vacation motor trip on which they visited Portland, Eugene, coast points and Crater, Odell and Diamond lakes. They found fishing poor, but were only rained on parts of two days, which made the trip enjoyable. Near Portland they visited at the T. C. Troge home, and at Yachats saw Blaine Blackwell, formerly of this county, who was working in the hotel. Mr. Howell tells of a freak automobile accident seen at an intersection in Portland. One car hit another on the rear bumper sending the front car clear up on its front wheels. It appeared for a second inevitable that the car would fall on over against a telephone post, but the driver turned the steering wheel just as the car was at its peak, spinning it around and it came down with a bounce right beside the car that struck it, without sign of so much as a scratch.

Ways to Increase Milk Output Listed by OSC

Oregon dairymen can increase production in response to national defense needs by keeping more cows and by better feeding and management practices, say Roger W. Morse and I. R. Jones of the Oregon State college dairy department in a brief four-page extension bulletin, No. 550, entitled, "Oregon Dairymen and National Defense."

Under the present favorable feed and butterfat price ratio, it may be profitable temporarily to retain cows of lower producing ability, according to the authors. If this is done, however, an adequate supply of hay and pasture, either home grown or purchased at reasonable prices, will be necessary for profitable returns.

The leaflet contains a schedule for the guidance of dairymen in feeding concentrates according to production, as a means of obtaining the greatest amount of milk from cows of varying production ability. Oregon dairymen are warned, however, in any present expansion to keep in mind that after the war there may be a considerable drop in prices.
