Columbia Valley Control Opposed By Oregon Body

The Oregon Reclamation congress is opposed to the creation of a Columbia valley authority which would remove the control from the states concerned, and is urging that consideration of authority bills be deferred until after the passing of the present national defense emergency.

Details of the action of the congress on this and many other matters are contained in a mimeographed list of resolutions adopted, and just prepared for distribution by Dr. W. L. Powers, long-time secretary of the congress and head of the soils department at Oregon State college. In recognition of Dr. Powers' long service the congress presented him with a leather travelling bag.

The resolution dealing with the Columbia valley authority was the most comprehensive adopted at the congress. It holds that a recognized statutory and stable authority for the Columbia river watershed can best be accomplished through the operation of the present Bonneville act, possibly with amendments.

"We deplore the centralization of power under any authority, in any person or persons not immediately responsive to the area affected," the resolution stated.

In connection with the current drive for greater production of dairy products and vegetables for processing, the Reclamation congress pointed out that this will require the installation of more individual irrigation pumping plants, and that necessary equipment will need to be given priority rating to insure its availability in time for next season's use.

More research work on stream flow inventories and ground water resources, as well as on methods of applying irrigation water without waste of soil or water resources, was also urged. The Soil Conservation service was requested to extend to legally organized irrigation and drainage districts the same kind and amount of service it renders to soil conservation districts, thus preventing unnecessary overlapping of district organizations.

Top officers of the congress were re-elected, with Frank T. Morgan, Nyssa, continuing as president.

Program Feature Gets Recognition

Corvallis—The Institute of Education by Radio has awarded a certificate of honorable mention to the state-owned radio station, KOAC, in recognition of its program, "News of the Week," released each Friday as a part of the KOAC school of the air series. Programs to receive this recognition were passed upon by a board of judges who rated them on their educational content, comprehensibility, radio quality, and production.

The program, which is being given again this year, includes a review of the week's news events, with some interpretation as to their significance. It is heard each Friday between 11 and 12 o'clock.
