OSC Committee to Organize Help in Farm Repair Plan

A committee to mobilize the efforts of the Oregon State college agricultural staff behind the current national campaign to insure adequate machinery for producing and harvesting next year's crops has been appointed by William A. Schoenfeld, dean and director of agriculture. The committee will help carry on the program inaugurated in this state by the United States agricultural defense board aimed at bringing about early repair of all present machinery on farms, and immediate ordering of essential new equipment.

Named on the special committee are F. E. Price, agricultural engineer in the experiment station, chairman; W. L. Teutsch, assistant director of extension, and E. R. Jackman, extension farm crops specialist. All county agents will be enlisted in the state-wide program.

The most acute farm machinery problem in Oregon is to obtain adequate equipment to handle the 50 per cent expansion in acreage of winter legume seed, according to Dean Schoenfeld. Tentative plans have been made for a series of county-wide educational meetings at which seed harvesting methods will be discussed and the machinery situation in the various localities will be surveyed. Oregon farm machinery dealers and distributors will be invited to cooperate in these meetings, which will deal with the most efficient operation of seed-harvesting machinery, as well as how to obtain the necessary equipment.

Early repair of all machinery now on farms will be urged throughout the state to make sure that necessary parts can be ordered in plenty of time. Extension men believe that Oregon farmers generally have had such long experience with handling and repairing machinery that they are more skilled than the average throughout the country, hence will not need actual training schools on this work. The principal task, it is believed, will be to bring about an immediate inventory of repair needs, with orders placed at once.

Closely allied to this is the current drive to have farmers gather and sell all scrap iron available. Usable parts and iron suitable for further repair work are to be held on farms, however.

Extension Plans Center on Main Defense Efforts

"The work of the federal cooperative extension service is itself being conducted under a 'priorities system' these days," said W. L. Teutsch, assistant director of extension at Oregon State college, upon his return from the recent meeting of the Land Grant College association in Chicago. "First on the priorities list is cooperation in the various national defense efforts, and second is planning for the post-war adjustments."

Teutsch pointed out that extension service work in relation to national defense includes cooperation with the U. S. agricultural defense boards in increasing food for defense, furthering the national campaign for better nutrition, cooperating with other agencies in such things as machinery repair and collection of scrap iron, and in a program for rural youth.

The current youth program, involving 4-H clubs, is emphasizing all of the previously mentioned activities, plus emphasis on expansion of farm gardens and on the training of club members in the ideals and methods of the democratic way of life.

Planning for the post-war period will be carried on in Oregon as in the past through the active work of county land use and agricultural program planning committees. Already some preliminary work of this nature was carried on last spring when a report was formulated on adjusting Oregon agriculture to meet the impacts of war and national defense, Teutsch continued.

This pattern is now being followed more or less throughout the country, according to reports made at the land grant association meeting. At those meetings questions of national defense and post-war planning occupied the entire program, said Teutsch.

Secretary of Agriculture Wickard has recently issued a call to all USDA agencies to assist immediately in this post-war planning aimed at averting another agricultural depression such as hit the industry in the early twenties. Planning for this kind of future is a part of the defense effort itself, according to Secretary Wickard.
