This summons is served upon you pursuant to an order of the Honorable James Alger Fee, Judge of the above-entitled court, made and entered in the above-entitled action on the 16th day of December, 1941, by publication thereof for four successive weeks in the Heppner Gazette Times, a newspaper of general circulation in Morrow County, Oregon, published at Heppner, Morrow County, Oregon, and designated by the above-entitled court as the newspaper most likely to give notice of the pendency of this proceeding. The date of the first publication of this summons is the 18th day of December, 1941.

CARL C. DONAUGH, United States Attorney for the District of Oregon, F. P. KEENAN, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, BERNARD H. RAMSEY, Special Attorney, Department of Justice, Attorneys for Petitioner. P. O. Address: 506 U. S. Court House, Portland, Oregon.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 18.—Over night the national capital has changed its habits. War is the answer. The streets are speckled with men in uniform and American flags are fluttering in the breeze. Until last week the thousands of army and navy officers summoned here to work on national defense, wore civilian clothes for it was not considered good taste to display uniforms when a nation was at peace. Now every reserve officer (dozens from Oregon and Washington) are in uniform of the various services. Armed soldiers guard the streets on either side of the White House, the treasury, the bureau of printing and engraving (it makes the paper money and postage stamps), and other buildings are closed to the public. On the top of the commerce department building where Jesse H. Jones is secretary, two anti-aircraft guns—the only ones in the capital—have been mounted and are pointing over the White House a block away. Shivering soldiers stand watch over the weapons.

Senate office building and the two house office buildings are given a blackout every night at 8 o'clock and only one entrance is available to congressmen and senators. The capitol building is guarded by armed patrols in capitol plaza. The floodlights have been turned off the capitol dome. There is no light in Lincoln memorial, but the guards are there. All street lights have been turned half down, but the theaters and stores, decorated with Christmas lights, continue to blaze.

No one can enter the White House, the treasury, the war department or any other government building without a pass. All employees are provided with identification cards bearing their picture, but more than these tags are required to break through the cordon of watchers. To enter the senate gallery, visitors must assemble on the second floor, where they are interrogated and display a special card issued by the congressman, then, after leaving brief cases, cameras and packages outside, they are led in groups to the gallery. In the corridors of the capitol lurk G-men giving everyone the once over.

At the president's press conference and at those of Secretary of State Cordell Hull no reporter who represents a Japanese, German, French or Italian newspaper is permitted. The Japanese and the others have either been arrested or their identification cards taken up. All others must give assurance that they are not serving papers of the Axis. The president does not chafe and banter with the press since the Pearl Harbor tragedy; he is very serious, speaks slowly and softly, as secret service men stand in the crowd of correspondents and view with suspicion any reporter whose pipe bulges in his pocket.

The president admonished: Do not listen to nor spread rumors. The chief occupation in Washington is doing just that and, right or wrong, the people have a firm belief that they know all the details of the Pearl Harbor affair. A visitor can drop off a plane at 4 o'clock and by 5 o'clock he has heard the rumors and is willing to tell them; always the rumors are the same—so many battleships, so many cruisers, so many airplanes destroyed, and this has the effect of making people pull in their belts and be more determined than ever to knock the little brown sons of heaven off the map.

Arrangements for blackouts have fizzled. Only $10,000 was available for civilian defense until a couple of days ago, when one million was appropriated. There was no air raid alarm until a 12-year old siren was borrowed from a nearby fire department (volunteer). This refused to work, its mild squeak being drowned by auto horns when a test was made. There are only three air raid shelters in the district; two are underground garages in the government buildings; the third an underground hole where gas tests were made in 1917, and there is a population of one million.

Office of civilian defense, where Fiorella LaGuardia is director and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is first assistant, has been a part time job, with volunteers. Neither LaGuardia nor Mrs. Roosevelt remains at headquarters; they have other engagements—LaGuardia has to run the affairs of the city of New York. Their numerous aides, part-times, are society women and debutantes whose principal problem has been trying to decide what kind of a uniform they should wear. There are many social workers in the ranks. The Parent-Teachers association decided that school children should have identification tags in case they were bombed. Despite the warning of army officers that the safest place in an air raid is indoors, the schools have been practicing fire drills to send the children into the streets when and if an air raid warning is given. Among government workers are thousands who are hysterical and in a constant state of jitters. On "the hill" war is the only talk indulged in by legislators, and members from the Pacific coast are receiving mailbags full of letters asking unanswerable questions. Government workers no longer have a snap; they must work long hours and bureau chiefs are making their help work overtime and on Sundays, too.
