lived in one part, Mr. Berry, his wife and boy in the other. All were taken sick in one year. He lost the father and mother first. Then Mrs. Berry was taken with a throat trouble from which she succumbed. In this last illness, Mr. Berry obtained a specialist from Cincinnati to take care of her at $100 a trip (this was at the time of Cleveland's panic). About the time the wife died, he lost the home.

He stepped off the engine one evening when he got in and started hoboing, coming first to San Francisco, then to Portland and on to here.

He had a good run on the railroad as testified by the fact that he hauled McKinley through the campaign. He was chairman of the grievance committee of his division, and member of the board of examiners for young engineers on that road.

Mr. Campbell testified that Mr. Berry was an excellent steam engineer and "a faithful servant if there ever was one." Mr. Campbell and his son, Roy, called on Mr. Berry at the hospital in Pendleton after the affliction, and he was impressed by the tremendous effort Mr. Berry made to talk to them without avail.

M. L. Case returned home Friday from a visit in Portland and other points in the Willamette valley, Mrs. Case remaining below for benefit of her health.
