Sugar Saving Not Hard If Wasteful Habits Adjusted

The sugar shortage making necessary using less of it in the home is by no means a tragedy from the nutrition standpoint even though it may be somewhat inconvenient and require changing some habits, believes Miss Lucy A. Case, extension nutritionist at Oregon State college.

Ways by which such adjustments can be made have been suggested by Dr. Louise Stanley, chief of the bureau of home economics in Washington, D. C., and these apply very well to Oregon homes, says Miss Case. Most folks can get along on a lot less sugar than they normally eat and still have nutritious meals that taste good, says Dr. Stanley.

While sugar supplies energy in an exceedingly palatable form, any necessary reduction can easily be made up by increased consumption of other foods. Inexpensive energy-giving foods include whole grain cereals, starchy vegetables, dried fruits, and many others.

Elimination of sugar waste will sometimes help make up the shortage. One of the most obvious wastes is undissolved sugar in the bottom of coffee or teacups. Others are oversweetened foods. A good plan is to experiment to see if the amount of sugar put on breakfast cereal or in coffee and tea is a matter of habit, and whether a person would be just as satisfied with a half teaspoonful or so less, Dr. Stanley continued.

Use of dried fruit on top of a cereal makes less sugar necessary. Use of fewer rich desserts, pastries, and sweet cakes will also cut down on sugar consumption. Fresh fruits are among the most nutritious and desirable of desserts and many of these carry their own sugar. Less sugar can also be used in canning fruit, as it is not the sugar which preserves the fruit but the heat in processing and the airtight seal.

Another way to reduce sugar consumption is to add the sugar at the end of the cooking time in making apple sauce or similar sauces. It takes less sugar to get the same sweetness if the sugar is not cooked so long.
