Farm Grain Bin Plans Ready; Material Big ?

With available elevator and warehouse storage in Oregon far below the requirement for this year's grain crop, hundreds of farm storage facilities are going to be needed before next winter. In preparation for the expected building of farm storage bins of wood, the agricultural engineering department of the O. S. C. experiment station has reviewed available plans and specifications of various sizes and types and has issued recommendations on those found suited for Oregon conditions.

Plans and specifications for these are available through any county extension office at prices covering merely the cost of materials. Granary plans are for sizes varying from 500 to 6400 bushel capacity, and include some combination silos and grain bins. How the lumber freezing order will effect this program remains to be seen.

The college department has also given its approval to a recent publication of the West Coast Lumbermen's association, which includes plans and specifications for wood grain storage bins built of Douglas fir. Most of those included are U.S. D.A. plans or adaptations of them for construction with western lumber. Copies of this pamphlet may be had through any lumber yard or direct from W.C.L. Asso., in Eugene.

War Bond Heads At Arlington Meeting

That increasing quotas for sale of war bonds may be expected in coming months was emphasized at a district meeting at Arlington Tuesday afternoon headed by Ray Conway, state administrator and George Godfrey and Alan Rinehart, deputy administrators, of the Oregon War Bond Savings council. The head men complimented the counties represented for the way they have responded to date, and were assured by county council representatives that all would strive harder to meet the increasing demands for more and more money with which to furnish material and supplies to the fast-growing army, navy and marine forces.

Counties represented were Morrow, Gilliam, Sherman, Wheeler, Grant, Wasco and Hood River. P. W. Mahoney, county chairman, headed the local delegation, including Chas. B. Cox, B. C. Pinckney, Ralph Jackson and Jasper Crawford. Others in attendance were D. N. McKay, D. L. Lemon, Raymond Crowder, Gilliam; Giles L. French, W. Ray Blake, E. D. McKee, Sherman; William Steiwer, Wheeler; Roscoe Krier, Wasco; Ed E. Lage, Clayton McLucas, N. C. Coulter, Hood River; Sam Keenins, Fred Cliff, Jim Maples, E. T. Way, Grant.
