SUFFERS GAS BURNS

Stumbling and falling while carrying a can of gasoline in one hand and a lantern in the other at the Scritsmeir mill Monday morning, Mr. Dyreson was severely burned when gasoline that spilled on his clothing caught fire. He extinguished the burning clothing in the mill pond and returned to put out the blaze at the scene of the accident before arousing anyone, when he was brought to Heppner for treatment.

THE NEWEST GAME

Stretching across the country, the new game called "Keep Looking" or "Go Find the Rubber" is being played by everyone these days. The best place to play is right at home, where every member of the family can take part.

At a given signal, usually the snap of a rubber band, the players begin the first phase of the game called "Combing the Home." It's everybody's move, and each participant takes a section of the house for "combing." Players need not be exceptionally skillful, although a pair of sharp eyes is a great help.

The object of the game is to collect every piece of unused rubber in each room in the house. Latest ruling on the new sport is that items collected should not be confined to SCRAP rubber, but should include every rubber item that is not actually needed. This ruling may call for an occasional conference between the rubber owner and the rubber finder, to determine the usefulness of the object.

When "Combing the Home" has been completed, one member of the group is delegated to place the collected items behind the goal line—the nearest service station.

Aleutian Battle No Mystery, Navy Says

The so-called "mystery" of the Aleutian battle is merely a mystery of weather—of fog and slow gray rain—coupled with a desire to keep the enemy in the dark, according to a Navy spokesman of the Thirteenth Naval district.

"If the public is confused about the situation in Western Alaska, then so is the enemy—and that is all to the good," he said. "You can't make a statement about a battle until the battle is decided. As Admiral King has told the American people, the battle for the Aleutians is continuing.

"It's a weird, wild country up there. There are great patches of fog and rain in which the enemy can hide, as a band of guerillas may hide in the bush. There are literally thousands of small bays and inlets. The Japs know the country, but so does the Navy.

"Why haven't the Army and Navy already driven the Japs out of the Aleutians? The weather explains that, in part. It's one thing to get at them in clear skies and another to get at them when the weather is foul and thick and snow is in the air and quick-forming ice burdens the wings of planes. You can depend on it, they are getting smacked whenever there is a rift in the fog banks. Some of the greatest stories of the war, some of the finest contributions to Naval tradition, will come out of this strange struggle of give and take in the Aleutians.

"I wouldn't want to be one of those Japs up there. Suppose you had spent years as a Jap fisherman in Alaska, or as a bus-boy in Seattle and had gone back home a few weeks before Pearl Harbor. Then suppose, because of your experience, you were sent on this Aleutian expedition — to occupy the outer islands, to try to take the Alaska outposts and, if successful in that, to establish bases in Alaska from which to attack British Columbia and the Northwest.

"Such a Jap knows where he is, but he also knows with whom he is dealing. He knows the type of men who are above the fog, and out behind the snow and rain squalls, searching for him. This Jap knows that if he isn't gone today he will be tomorrow, because these men are determined that even though the American flag was lowered in the Philippines it will not be lowered on the North American continent. And Canada will have a welcome hand in the struggle also.

"Those are real men up there, standing between us and the enemy, and they are facing realistically the problem presented by the opening of a new front where we meet the enemy for the first time under conditions where the difficulties are equal on either side.
