Colleges Told to Train More Future Officers

Oregon State College—America's military services are looking to the colleges to prepare a reservoir of college trained men suitable to become officers three or four years hence, members of a national committee told representatives of all west coast colleges at San Francisco recently.

E. B. Lemon, registrar, who represented O. S. C., reported that he was impressed by the fact that the military leaders stated frankly that it is the obligation of the colleges and universities to keep qualified men enrolled in the regular courses.

The conference was called by the newly organized national joint army, navy, and marine corps college procurement committee. This board has been given the responsibility of coordinating and directing the various programs which combine enlistment in the army or navy reserve corps with opportunity to continue college work to graduation.

Members of the board told the college representatives that the military services are well provided with officer material for the present, but that it is essential that most officers for the future be college-trained men. They pointed out that these reserve enlistments are not a means of escaping military service but of preparing for more important service after students graduate, unless the war ends before then.

The board has set up quotas for each college and each class, which for Oregon State provide opportunity for approximately 925 for the army reserve and the same number for the navy. These include the various branches of the two services, such as the air forces, marines, and coast guard. After this year quotas will be provided only for the freshman class, hence it is essential that former students who are interested prepare to take advantage of the program at once, says Lemon.

Freshman students and others below 20 years of age, and therefore not subject for call under selective service, will, for the most part, not enroll until they register in college this fall. Age limits for the navy V-1 program have been raised to include all between 17 and 25, inclusive.

Cheese sandwiches appeared to be doomed a year ago because it was doubtful whether we would have enough cheese to go round for our allies and for lavish home use. But now there's plenty of cheese for American tables as well as for our lend-lease needs. That makes it an opportune time to take advantage of the abundance of cheese because it's a nourishing food at low cost. The OPA consumer division declares that the housewife who buys food when it is plentiful rather than using foods limited in supply is helping the war effort. So start planning menus that call for cheese and more cheese.
