

Farm Outlook For '43 Not So Promising

The wartime farm outlook calls for further adjustments in Oregon farm business operations and more careful planning of farm production and marketing operations than usual, according to a summary of prospective conditions in 1943 prepared by L. R. Breithaupt, Oregon State college extension agricultural economist. Breithaupt returned recently from the annual national outlook conference in Washington, D. C.

It is assumed that the war will continue through 1943 and probably longer, causing the demand for farm products to be even greater than in 1942, he reports.

"Although prices for some farm products are expected to average higher next year than in 1942, owing to supply-demand conditions, price ceilings will offset much of the upward pressure on farm prices resulting from great increase in demand. It is also probable that gross agricultural production will be smaller and farm expenses higher. Farmers will experience greater difficulties in producing and marketing maximum amounts of farm war products because of a shortage of labor and transportation. Growing conditions are not likely to be as much more favorable as in 1942."

The family living outlook, while relatively good, is not quite so favorable as last year either, the conference decided. The civilian population of the United States will have to get along with somewhat less food, for example, despite a record volume of production in 1942 and carry-over reserves.

Overseas shipments to military forces and the countries associated with America in the war will require an estimated 20 percent of the food compared with the 10 percent in 1942. The demand for meat, dairy products, eggs, sugar, potatoes, and vegetables is expected to be greater than the supply. The supply of cereals used for human food is large and will continue sufficient through 1943 even if production next year is only average. A complete report on the conference conclusions is available in printed form from county agents.

Some drastic changes are being made in transportation and marketing, to which Oregon farmers will need to give more attention in planning farm operations in 1943, Breithaupt believes. Foods of high nutritional value that are not bulky have the best outlook, unless there is a local market demand which will not require too much labor and transportation. Many families will produce more vegetables and other foods to offset shortages in stores.

"Save That Pig" Is Slogan for 1943

An extra pig saved at birth may mean an extra hog raised to market, points out H. A. Lindgren, extension animal husbandman at O.S.C. in connection with the current national campaign to increase hog production 10 percent next year.

Secretary Wickard, a successful hog raiser himself, knows the importance of saving every young pig possible as well as care to avoid loss in growing them. An extra pig saved from each litter would provide most of the 10 percent increase, says Lindgren.

Pointers that may help in saving that extra pig as given by Lindgren include the following:

1. Mark down the date of 114 days from breeding day.
2. Have the sow in comfortable quarters a week before she farrows.
3. Provide "gadgets" to protect the pigs from being crushed by the sow such as fender rails or electric brooders.
4. Have satchel ready and be on hand when pigs arrive.
5. Stand by to give attention to the young arrivals. Revive them if necessary by slapping gently on the sides. Clear mucus from nostrils so they can breathe. Warm them by placing them in a tub next to a jug filled with warm water. As soon as they are on their feet, hold them to the sow so they can get a few swallows of milk, then keep them away until she is through farrowing.

6. Give the sow no feed—nothing but warmed water.

7. For the next few days provide sow with liquid feeds, such as milk or a slop made by mixing grain with water, preferably warm.

8. After that, provide all the feed she will eat.

9. Watch litters religiously to guard against disease.

10. Sanitation in the hog lot is essential to save pigs from parasites, necrotic enteritis and the like.

Dehydration Offers Field for Industry

Oregon has not yet lived up to its possibilities in taking part in the national program to produce dehydrated foods for wartime use, believes E. H. Wiegand, head of the food industries department at Oregon State college. Professor Wiegand has just returned from taking part in a second training school for operators of dehydrators, held in Rochester, N. Y., (where he was sent by the government).

"The national program calls for an output of 100,000,000 pounds of dehydrated vegetables this season," said Professor Wiegand in an interview over KOAC on his return. "Plants for a total output of some 80,000,000 pounds are already in operation or will be completed soon. Oregon, despite the existence of many plants capable of being converted to vegetable dehydration, has only 1 percent of the plant capacity in operation thus far."

Professor Wiegand said that on his return from the east he stopped at the army subsistence laboratory in Chicago, where he sampled a complete meal made from dehydrated foods, starting with tomato juice cocktail made from powdered juice and ending with a dried custard dessert. Every part of this meal was excellent, he said, and reflected the advance that has been made in dehydration methods.

The 80,000,000 pounds of dried food will be enough to provide five million soldiers with two meals a week for a full year. Use of dehydrated foods is considered one of the major steps in the solution of the shipping problem.

Oregon State college now has a small experimental dehydration plant in operation and is prepared to give assistance to those who desire to get into this food processing field.

A Denver Colo., bank vault, weighing one ton, went to the city's scrap drive.

The daily cost to France of German occupation would build 2,500 modern workmen's homes.

It has been estimated that 82 percent of Americans normally get to their jobs in automobiles.
