IRRIGATION OUTLOOK FOR 1943 REMAINS FAVORABLE

The outlook for 1943 irrigation water supplies in Oregon continues to be very good although little more precipitation either as rain or snow was added in the past month, reports R. A. Work, in charge of snow surveys and irrigation water forecasts in this state.

The second monthly report has just been issued by Work who conducts the project for the Soil Conservation service in cooperation with the O. S. C. experiment station. A final report and forecast will be issued early in April in connection with the usual district meeting held in irrigated sections of the state.

Mountain snow supplies continue above average in most parts of the state, and at high levels the snow is approaching 50 per cent density and is thus in condition to begin immediate water delivery with melting temperatures, the report shows. More reservoirs are half full or better than in any recent year and many of them are by-passing the present run-off to provide space for later inflow. Conditions by districts are uniformly excellent except southern Oregon west of the Cascades, where they are spotted with only fair prospects in a few localities.

COLOR SCHEME USED IN VICTORY GARDEN

Victory gardeners will do well to have a color scheme in mind in planting their gardens this year, because colors are closely related to food values, says Lucy A. Case, extension nutritionist at Oregon State college. Green leafy vegetables are especially high in minerals and vitamins, while yellow vegetables, such as carrots and squash, are good sources of vitamin A.

Among the many common green vegetables recommended by Miss Case, more cabbage is stressed as particularly important. One-half cup of plain shredded cabbage supplies more than a third of an active man's daily vitamin C requirement. From four to six dozen plants of early and five to 10 dozen plants of late cabbage are recommended for a family of five where space is available. For carrots, 50 feet of early planting and 100 feet for late supplies are recommended.
