WASTE KITCHEN FATS HELP WIN THE WAR

United Nations Glycerine Stockpile on Decline Declares County Salvage Chief

Unless every possible drop of fats and the resulting shortage played a major role in the final defeat of Die Vaterland.

Now the larger part of the fats and oils supply of the United Nations has been cut off. As a result they are faced with a shortage of glycerine, by-product of fat. Glycerine is an essential ingredient of many war weapons. It is used in cordite, Britain's propellant powder; in dynamite and nitro-glycerine. It is used in gyro-stabilizers, in ships' compasses, in the mechanisms which release the depth charges. It is necessary in resin form as protective coatings for ships, tanks and guns. It is a vital ingredient in many of the medications which heal soldiers' wounds.

"One tablespoonful of fat a day is all that's required from the women of Morrow county," Conrad concluded. "That small amount, multiplied by millions of homes, will be sufficient to supply our part in keeping the glycerine stockpile at a safe figure."

Germany well knew what can happen to a nation short on fats and grease. England in the last war had succeeded in cutting off Germany's supply of imported oil and
