For the second year the men disabled in World War I have shared their fund raising handiwork with the men of a younger generation, those who have come back recently from the battlefronts in the Pacific and the Meriterranean, and even in the north, for hospitalization in their home land.

It is estimated by the American Legion auxiliary, which sponsors the poppy drive and which supervises the making and selling of these crimson reminders of the men who shed their blood on the battle-grounds of two world wars, that at least 15,000,000 poppies will be offered for sale on the streets of cities, towns and villages throughout the United States.

This is the largest number ever prepared, according to Mrs. A. J. Mathebat, national president of the auxiliary. Not since the custom was established in 1921 has it been thought advisable to have so many poppies made ready for sale. The auxiliary anticipates a much greater interest this year in the men who have been wounded fighting for democracy.

The crepe paper poppy has replaced the silken one made originally in France by widows and orphans of Poilus. In 1922 veterans of the United States forces who were hospitalized in Minnesota began making some of the crimson flowers for Memorial day and since then more than 50 poppy shops have been opened where veterans may work. PLANNING ISN'T NEW

THE way a lot of people are talking these days, you'd think planning is something new.

But anybody who's ever run a farm or a factory knows that if you don't plan, you can't get the most out of what you have to work with.

To plan properly, the farmer has to know about crops, soils, seasons, tools, and stock; and the man operating a factory has to know about machines, markets, science, and engineering.

Yet for all this specialized knowledge which each of these activities requires, the managers of both farm and factory have much in common in their planning. They have the same problems—to mention a few—of employment and taxes, of costs and a fair profit, of setting aside reserves for a "rainy day."

And they have the same objective in their planning—to do everything they can for their country today, and, tomorrow, to make a fair living through greater service to their fellow Americans. General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y.
