fancy gift containers unless the package itself has some value of its own. For example, if you bought fruit or candy in a box which later could be used for sewing or a handkerchief box, you could be charged for the package as well as the contents. However, if the necktie you select for Uncle Henry is in a cardboard box with yuletide decorations, there should be no extra cost—only the price of the tie. The ceiling price covers only the contents of the package. On the other hand, if a firm charged for special gift wrapping last year, a charge may be made for the service this year.
