NO SINGLE fact is more vital to the future of America than the fact that trees grow.

Wood has proved to be such a vital material in war, and its myriad uses are expanding so rapidly, that it may well be rated as our No. 1 raw material.

To perpetuate this resource, by growing new crops of trees, is a job in which forest operators and the public must cooperate. The great enemy of forests is fire. Most forest fires are caused by man's carelessness. The one completely effective way to fight fire is to prevent fire. Fires must be fought after they start, but it's a costly process with uncertain results.

Prevention is certain.

Do your share in preventing forest fires by making sure no act of yours can start one.
