Matt Doorly Versus the Tomato

Matt Doorly's skin broke out in a rash last week. He finally admitted to Doc Hollister he'd eaten twelve tomatoes in a row just the day before.

"Shucks," said Doc. "That's all that's the matter with you. That kind of eating would turn anybody red."

So now Matt has not only cut out all tomatoes for himself. He's forbidden his family to eat tomatoes. And won't even have them in the house. Says tomatoes are anti-social and ought to be prohibited by law.

Funny how some people rush off to extremes like that. They take a wholesome thing and overdo it till it disagrees with them—or maybe find they don't happen to like it—and then they want it banned for everybody.

From where I sit, folks ought to realize there's a middle ground in everything—a middle ground of moderation on the one hand . . . and tolerance for our neighbors on the other.

TREES TOO . . . are a CROP

ON VASI areas, best suited to the production of timber, trees are being planted, protected, grown, and harvested like any other crop.

Long past is the period when forests were cut to provide fields for agriculture. This is no longer necessary and the land now classified as forestland can be kept intact for the purpose of growing more trees.

We are in an era of managed forestry, and the forest industries looking ahead, plan for the continuous production of tree crops.

We have learned that trees are a crop and, as such, can keep on producing useful harvests for the future.

How Grapefruit Got Its Name

Seed for the first grapefruit planted in the United States was brought from Spain. The early fruit was large, coarse and bitter. Our present grapefruit is 100 percent American. We have various sizes and delicious flavors.

Grapefruit got its name because of its tendency to grow in clusters like grapes. It is one of our best sources of vitamin G—the anti-scurvy vitamin.

We also have a full line of sweet oranges in various sizes. Come in and take some home with you.
