The Panama Canal

The Panama Canal, thirty years old in August 1944, will assume unparalleled importance with the shifting of the war's spot light from Europe to Asia.

When we concentrate on Japan, it will often be quicker to load merchant ships on our East Coast, where production is heaviest, and ship directly through the Canal. This will relieve our over-burdened railroads.

Pre-war use of the Canal was 13 ships per day - far less than its capacity. Vital to the war effort, the canal will be equally essential to our post-war maritime commerce.
