WE ARE COOPERATING with nature in her eagerness to replace every harvested tree with scores of new seedlings.

Forests can . . . with good management . . . be maintained in perpetual production so that the harvest of wood fifty years from now can be as great as it is today. We have that kind of plan for our woods.

If we can keep a proper balance between the trees we harvest and the abundant new growth which follows, the forest can add to the economic life-blood of this community continuously . . . help make business better for all of us.

Our job is one of management which cooperates with nature.
