HOW TO MAKE NATURE ROLL UP HER SLEEVES

AND GO TO WORK!

NATURE isn't lazy, but she sometimes needs a little help and encouragement in her urge to replace old trees with new.

An old forest is very largely a static forest . . . one which makes little use of the growth potential in the land. The trees are mature, crowded, and lose almost as much wood through decay and disease as they grow.

When we clear the mature units from such a woods, struggling young trees get their chance for more sunlight and soil food. They usually make the most of it and the land goes to work producing new wood at a greatly accelerated rate.

This is the forest cycle which can give us plenty of new wood for tomorrow. This is the way in which we manage our timber lands.
