WHAT'S INSIDE A TREE

The pioneers thought trees were something to clear off the land, burn in the fireplace, use for cabins, and split into fence rails. You can still do those things with a tree, but you can also make . . . paper, plastics, sugar, chemicals, plywood, textiles, and a list of other new products as long as your arm.

And . . . the list is probably about half as long now as it will be in ten years. This is the reason why America has a big job in changing her forest operations from timber "mining" to timber "cropping."

We are glad to be among those who have applied a land management plan to our woods which we think will result in an uninterrupted flow of forest products from this community.
