GOING TO WORK YOUNGER

Many of the trees which produce our forest harvest today are two or three hundred years old . . . a little too old. We use trees of this age because we have them . . . not because they are required to produce good lumber, paper, or plywood.

As we refine . . . and then further refine . . . our methods of processing wood from the forests, we can use younger trees. TREE FARM trees of tomorrow will go to work at an earlier age.

In some areas good pulpwood can be grown in twelve years . . . good saw timber, in twenty-five to thirty. This means that TREE FARMING is a very practical business operation . . . a long-term, settled business which can be depended upon for the future.
