Formula

— FOR MAINTENANCE OF FOREST INDUSTRY EMPLOYMENT IN THIS AREA

Sunlight AND GOOD SOIL

It is not necessary to hand plant harvested timber areas. Nature has a great urge to automatically propagate new trees . . . and if given an opportunity will seed twenty youngsters for every tree harvested.

The foresters' job is one of cooperation. The formula for taking advantage of nature's inclination is contained in simple steps: . . . leave a source of seed after logging . . . protect growing trees from fire.

Hand planting is needed on harvested land where the formula has not been applied in the past . . . where there are no seed sources or where the land has been rendered sterile by repeated fire.
