TWO KINDS OF FARMS

Everyone expects a wheat farm to yield successive crops year after year. That's the way farming is.

Now people are getting the same idea about forest lands . . . "tree farms" they're called by forest industries.

That's what forest lands really are, and that's what they are becoming more and more, as forest industries seek to perpetuate this vital resource.

The tree farm pictured here has yielded a harvest, just as the wheat farm is doing. But note the blocks of trees still standing. They will provide seed which will replenish the harvested areas which, before many years, will be producing new crops of trees.
