Flood Control Dam

The engineers has been $116,000 per flood. To offset this loss and provide protection for human life, it is proposed to construct a dam across the Willow creek valley just below the mouth of Balm fork. This dam will be 1300 feet long and rise 90 feet above the creek level. Impounded waters would form a lake nearly two and one-half miles long, completely submerging the Frank Monahan bottom land and extending into the lower part of the Frank Wilkinson ranch.

According to the engineers, if adopted the government will assume all financial obligations which include purchase of rights-of-way construction of the dam, enlarging the Willow creek channel through the corporate limits of Heppner and relocating roads and highways affected by the dam. The City of Heppner will be obligated to rebuild the Gale and Morgan street bridges and assume some other details with a total financial responsibility of approximately $35,000.

It was explained that enlarging the channel did not necessarily embrace straightening. There will be a little straightening but the main object is to deepen and widen where it will do the most good. All bridges will be given greater capacity so that they will be carriers instead of spreaders.

Sentiment expressed by local citizens was strongly in favor of the project going through. J. J. Wightman stated that aside from the security provided the people through the dam the minor irrigation service also appealed to him and he thought it would be favorably received by other ranchers along the creek. Several townsmen expressed the belief that the city would be fully justified in meeting the terms set up under the dam proposal, and there were no comments of an unfavorable nature.
