City Preparing To Go Ahead With Additional Well

Council Passes Resolution Calling For Early Action

A move to augment Heppner's water supply was made Monday evening when the city council passed a resolution calling for immediate drilling of a new well. This action is a revival of Mayor J. O. Turner's proposal of a year ago when he negotiated with A. M. Edwards to drill a well on a guarantee basis but which proposal was tabled indefinitely.

Probably construction of the flood control dam at the mouth of Balm fork which would necessitate relaying the city water main for a considerable distance is the factor in the proposed additional supply. Site for the well proposed by the mayor is close to town and at an elevation several hundred feet above the floor of the valley. If water is produced at this site it would be possible to pipe it around the hill and establish a reservoir as high or higher than the county's reservoir.

As a result of a visit by a committee representing numerous mothers of the town, the city may convert the building at the swimming tank into a recreation hall for the youth of the town. The Parent-Teacher association and other groups are interested in providing supervised recreation but the city fathers can't see their way clear to enter into this program as yet but did express a willingness to put out some money on fixing up the aforementioned building.

These changes will permit display of several cars and make for greater efficiency of the entire plant.

Lubrication and tire service will be carried on at the former Lundell service station corner May and Chase streets, which C. L. Hodge recently acquired. Gas and oil service will be available at the garage. The pumps are being moved to just outside the sidewalk line on the Main street side.
