Farmers Worked 75.4 Hours a Week

Average Hours of Work Per Week—1939, 1943, 1944

American farm operators averaged 75.4 hours of work a week during a recent three years, according to a nationwide survey of working habits in agricultural centers. In the same period, according to the American Iron and Steel Institute, workers in steel plants averaged 41.6 hours of labor a week. The operators of the six million American farms spent nearly 4000 work hours a year, per man, plus the use of mechanized equipment, to earn a living and to produce the crops and food needed to meet the urgent wartime demands of a hungry world. Farm operators in the West North Central area worked the longest hours, putting in an average of 83.2 hours a week. Second were the farm operators in the East North Central area with 82.5 hours a week, while farm operators in the Middle Atlantic worked 79.9 hours a week. Farm operators in the Pacific states put in the smallest number of weekly work hours, averaging 72.1 for the three years of 1939, 1943 and 1944.

drove to Heppner for his mother on Tuesday.

PP&L announces RESEARCH ADVISORY SERVICE

- Is your problem
- PRODUCTION?
  - PROCESSING?
  - MARKETING?
  - MANAGEMENT?

It may be that one scientist couldn't solve your particular industrial problem—but through the combined facilities of more than 900 of the outstanding industrial research laboratories of the United States, Great Britain and Canada, you're pretty apt to get just the answer you're looking for.

WHAT IS IT?
Research Advisory Service is the name of a successful, time-tested plan to bring to an individual industry or business concern the best available scientific and research talent. More than 900 of the world's top laboratories and other sources cooperate to give the best of their accumulated non-confidential knowledge and research.

HOW DOES IT WORK?
If you have an industrial or business problem, simply call, write or visit a representative of any Pacific Power & Light office. A check will be made of Research Advisory Service files to see if your problem previously has been solved. If not, your problem will be referred to laboratories or other sources most proficient in that particular field.

THIS SERVICE IS YOURS FOR THE ASKING!
Pacific Power & Light brings you this valuable new service because it has a vital stake in the business and industrial progress of the region we serve. We believe in free enterprise, and feel that to encourage it means a broader, healthier growth for this area through the development of its rich resources. While Research Advisory Service costs you nothing, it can be the means of saving you much time and money by supplying the solutions to your technical problems.

RESEARCH ADVISORY SERVICE IS YOURS... YOU ARE INVITED TO MAKE USE OF IT!
Complete details will be provided on request to any PP&L office.
