Highways To Health By ADA R. MAYNE

Winter pears are riding the crest of a thinning fruit market now, and many homemakers are buying taping, russet-skinned Fall Russets and juicy yellow Anjous to add sweetness and variety to winter menus.

A favorite combination at many dining tables is that of fresh pears and cheese, whether it be cottage, American or cream. This combination not only tastes good—it's good for you. Pears are a grand quick-energy food, being chock-full of levulose sugar, which provides quick energy and makes pears taste so deliciously sweet, yet with a minimum of calories (70 to 75 per pear). Cheese balances the ledger nicely, providing muscle-building protein, calcium, phosphorus for strong teeth and bones, and vitamin A for high resistance against infection.

Here are a number of fresh pear and cheese combinations that will add sparkle to winter menus:

Fresh pear halves, grated American cheese and mayonnaise
