Lexington Fares Well in Football Great at College

It isn't often that one small high school contributes more than one celebrity to a certain field of endeavor, but when it comes to football Lexington high school holds an outstanding record. This little school, with an average of about 20 boys, has two members on the Oregon State college "all time" football team.

First on the list is Harvey "Pap Hayseed" McAllister, who might have become an all-American center if the sports writers around the turn of the century could have seen anything west of the Ohlo river. As it was "Pap" was known far and wide among the followers of the game and had the situation well in hand on the west coast.

Second on the list, but no less notable, is Dallas Ward, who rated all-west coast end and was accorded a spot on the all-American second string. Ward is now line coach at the University of Minnesota.

Not a bad record for a little school that seldom had enough boys to make up a first team and a scrub team, and which today is playing six-man foot-
