Surplus Spuds in Oregon Available To Stock Feeders
Livestock feeders have taken about 340 carloads of the surplus Oregon potatoes acquired by the government in supporting prices to producers at the 90 percent of parity required by law, according to a report from E. Harvey Miller, chairman of the state PMA committee.

"The response to the feed potato offer has meant that no surplus Oregon potatoes as yet have been totally wasted," Miller said. "The only potatoes dumped have been lots that were deteriorating and out of condition."

The PMA committee has no outlets in sight other than sale for use as livestock feed for an additional 600 carloads of potatoes, Miller added. Any not taken by feeders probably will have to be dumped and will be wasted.

Dairymen, stockmen and hog growers have been buying the feed potatoes, Miller said, indicating that the surplus potatoes which otherwise would have been wasted will be marketed in the form of milk, butter, beef and pork.

County Triple A committees take orders for the feed potatoes at prices depending upon where the potatoes are in storage. On sales to feeders within the county where the surplus potatoes are located, the price is 20 cents a hundred pounds, with the buyer taking delivery at the producer's farm. On sales involving shipment to another county, the price is one cent a hundred-weight, with the buyer paying all freight charges.

Producers with potatoes under price support loans are encouraged to grade out and market only the select No. 1 grade potatoes, so that those sold for feed usually will consist of "fringe" No. 1 grade, No. 2s, and culls. They are in sound condition and contain not more than 2 percent soft rot.

SENDS GREETINGS
Emil Carlson of Woodburn has asked the editor to remember him to his friends and neighbors in Morrow county. We ran across him at the stage depot in Woodburn Thursday while enroute to Eugene. He was even glad to see a newspaper representative from up this way.
