

News From C. A. Office

A meeting of the Morrow County Fair board was held at this office Monday evening, July 14. Members J. G. Barratt, Orville Cutsforth and Ralph Skoube were in attendance and made plans for the county fair to be held at Heppner, as well as a North Morrow County fair to be held at Boardman.

Dates were set for the Morrow County Fair to be held at Heppner on September 5 and 6. The North Morrow Fair is to be held September 19 and 20.

Remodeling of the old CCC buildings located on the approximately three acres owned by the county is slow in getting under way due to difficulty in finding carpenters to do the job. The board asks that anyone interested in this job contact the county agent at once.

With several farm accidents occurring in Morrow county in the past few weeks it is perhaps well to call attention to farm safety. The week of July 20-26 has been proclaimed by President Truman and Governor Snell as Farm Safety week.

Last year's farm accident toll was 4500 killed and 300,000 injured, according to National Safety council figures. Many of these accidents could have been prevented. The safety week program is designed to stimulate interest in the development of "planned safety" for individual farms. Many dangerous hazards can be eliminated by a little thought. Intelligent planning on the part of farm families can save lives and prevent accidents.

Let us remember that preventing farm accidents is a year-round job stressed by a farm safety week to plan individually and collectively, to the end that injurious and fatal accidents can be reduced and eliminated.

Let us all try to keep farm accidents down to zero in Morrow county during farm safety week and thereafter.

Motorlog Party Goes To the Sun Over Snowy Peaks of Glacier Park

This is a continuation of a motorlog article appearing in The Sunday Oregonian. The article was prepared by The Oregonian in cooperation with the Oregon State Motor Association.

BY JALMAR JOHNSON

THE 52-mile-long road that cuts directly across Glacier national park in northwestern Montana is called Going-to-the-Sun highway, and going to the sun it truly was for our motorlog party of four which crossed its snow-banked heights on June 16, day after its opening for the season.

All the way from Spokane, where we stayed the first night out of Portland, rain clouds followed us and emptied their contents upon us, dimming our view of beautiful Pend Oreille (Ponderay) lake in northern Idaho and Flathead lake in northwestern Montana, as well as scenic spots between. Our almost brand-new Ford, furnished by the Oregon State Motor Association for this Oregonian motorlog trip to the Rockies, bounced over the water-filled chukholes in the Montana highway and its gleaming white paint was smeared with mud.

But as we approached Belton, western entrance to Glacier park, the rain stopped and the sun came out to tint the tops of the park's many 9000 to 10,000-foot glacier-clad peaks and to emphasize the emerald coloring of its lakes and streams.

It was 6 P. M. and we had far to go. Our reservations were at Swiftcurrent lake on the eastern side of the park. But we took our time on the half-hundred miles of good, hard-surfaced highway that winds through the green lodgepole pine, cedar, spruce, quaking aspen and willows up and up, past timberline, through 20-foot to 30-foot snow banks, where one-way passage had been cut only a few days before, over the continental divide.

Wild Animals Seen

Just inside the park bears walking on the highway set the pattern for the drive, which seemed to us a veritable parade of bears and deer. We counted seven of each, all on the highway or very close to it, before we climbed out of vegetation to cross the divide.

It was a matter of craning our necks from one side to the other to catch glimpses of animals on the one hand and beautiful scenery on the other. The sun was low in the west, but its rays touched the high peaks to bring out the purple and green colors in their perpendicular crags. The sun gave a rose tint to the snow fields high on the mountains and those of the park's 60 glaciers that we could see from the highway.

Waterfalls cascaded down the mountainsides on the steep drive to the summit. Some came down over strata of rock, which resembled giant stairways. Others crept softly under snow blankets which had not yet quite all melted away. We drove directly alongside the Weeping Wall, where recently thousands of springs gushed forth from a sheer cliff to fall to the highway and run over the lower side to the green valley below.

We had a leisurely day next day, driving back over Logan pass to take pictures which we couldn't get the night before, and then heading north to Canada. It is only 19 miles from Babb, Mont., to the Chief Mountain customs station between Glacier park and its Canadian counterpart, Waterton Lakes national park. From the border, where the log says, we were welcomed with dignity by the Canadian customs. It is only 20 miles to the Waterton Lakes townsite on Waterton lake, which is dominated by Mt. Grandtall and the Prince of Wales hotel, which is perched high on a hill above the lake and the town.

Motorlog car comes to a stop in 30-foot cut through snow at continental divide in Glacier national park. One-way traffic only was permitted through several such snow banks in park.

Here are some statistics that might be helpful to travelers: Distances—First day, Portland to Spokane, via Pasco, 384 miles; second day, Spokane to Swiftcurrent lake, via Sandpoint, Idaho, Thompson Falls, Plains, Elmo and Kalispell, Mont., through Glacier park, 410 miles; third day, Swiftcurrent lake to Waterton lake, 52 miles. Total, 846 miles.

Road conditions—Excellent from Portland to Sandpoint, Idaho; surfaced but rough in spots through Montana; excellent for mountain roads through Glacier and Waterton Lake parks.

Accommodations—Excellent in the national parks at rates to fit any purse, ranging from $2 or $2.50 a night for two persons in auto camps to $6 to $21 for two in the large hotels.
