

Ida May Hallock Dutton Tells Of Early Coming to Heppner

(From "Impressions" by Fred Lockley.)

"Yes, I can qualify as a pioneer of eastern Oregon, said Ida May Hallock Dutton when I dropped in to see her recently at the Mann home.

"We settled near Heppner," she continued, "before the town was started. Mr. Stansbury had a log cabin on the site of what is now Heppner. We left Portland in 1871, went to The Dalles by boat and from there drove to Eastern Oregon. Father took a homestead nine miles south of the Stansbury claim, on which Heppner was located two years later. Jackson L. Morrow and Henry Heppner started a store there in 1873, and the postoffice was named for Henry Heppner, a bachelor. He was 76 years old when he died in Portland in 1905.

"No, I am not a native Oregonian, though I have lived in Oregon almost 80 years. I was born in New York state March 29, 1860. My father, Oliver Hallock, was born in New York state, and my mother, whose maiden name was Hannah Elizabeth Mallory, was also born in New York state. My mother's brother, Rufus Mallory, was born at Coventry, N. Y., in 1831, and came to Oregon in 1859. He was admitted to the circuit court at Roseburg in 1860, the year I was born. Aaron Rose started the town of Roseburg in 1851. He married Lucy A. Rose of Roseburg. After they moved to Portland, Mrs. Mallory published a paper here for many years. In 1863 Judge Mallory was part owner of the Oregon Statesman at Salem. He practiced law at Salem and in Portland for many years.

"I was eight years old when we came to Oregon; we came by water by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Our trip from New York to the Isthmus was a quiet trip, but our trip from San Francisco to Portland on the John L. Stephens was a humdinger. It was a three-deck sidewheeler, and we had a rough trip. We went to Jefferson where my father and mother ran a hotel. They were building a railroad from Portland through the Willamette valley, and the railroad workers stopped at our hotel. In 1871 father drove a herd of cattle to Eastern Oregon. That's how we happened to locate near Heppner.

"My sister, Alberta Hallock, taught the first school in Heppner. She had nearly 20 pupils. There were the Stansbury children, the children of Jake Morrow and I also was a pupil. Alberta married L. H. Lee of Pendleton. He has a ranch on Burch creek. Our new teacher was Howard Wilson. He married one of the Melson girls of Salem. There were five of us children. My brother, Mallory, died not long after we came to Oregon. Albert was the next child, then came Homer. He set type for Sam Jackson on the East Oregonian at Pendleton. Homer married Nellie Bernard of Salem. Homer died when the Cham-

Exhibition Building For The North Morrow County Fair

This is the Boardman school building where exhibits of the North Morrow County fair will be housed. Good weather or bad, visitors will be comfortably housed while viewing the products on display in the gymnasium of this modern structure. Ample housing has been provided for stock and poultry exhibits near the school building.

An indication that 4-H club members are getting an experience that proves valuable in their adult life was indicated at the state fair held last week. A survey of all adult open class exhibits showed that over one-third of the purebred exhibits at the fair were former 4-H club members.

The Morrow County Beef Club members are meeting Saturday afternoon, September 20, at the home economics exhibit building at the fair grounds. All club members and parents are urged to attend as plans for taking fat beef and sheep to Pacific International will be discussed.
