Selling fat cattle when they reach a grade of "good" rather than finishing them out to "choice" or "prime" grades is a practical way to save grain during the current emergency, asserts H. A. Lindgren, OSC extension animal husbandman. It takes more grain to put a pound of gain on a highly finished animal than on an animal that is not so fat, Lindgren points out. And part of the grain that goes into those final pounds of gain is wasted because excess fat has to be trimmed from the carcass. For that reason, an animal grading "good" often yields a higher percentage of edible meat than one of higher grade.
The bureau of home economics has run extensive experiments on cooking poultry, and have found that low temperatures in cooking poultry and meats resulted in more juicy meat, more servings per pound, and more uniformly cooked meat. Low temperatures require a longer cooking time. Roasting schedules for poultry are available in HE 1475, "Poultry Cookery Recipes and Menus."
HE 1980, "Poultry Cookery," is another free circular with valuable hints.
The tender bird is roasted in an uncovered pan without water in the pan. The larger the bird, the lower the temperature. Covering the bird during roasting with a damp, greased, clean white cloth and moistening it occasionally helps keep the skin tender. Turkey halves may be roasted, cut side down, placed over the dressing on a pan inside another pan, with extra dressing at one side. Young turkey, or parts of turkey, may be sliced and fried like chicken.
Shoes suffer during wet weather. Once soaked they may never look well or fit as comfortably unless they are properly dried and cared for afterward.
Wet shoes should be taken off as soon as possible since the leather is weak when wet. Wearing shoes when wet pulls them out of shape and causes breaks or other damage. Care for them in this way: Stuff wet shoes with soft paper or absorbent cloth to take up moisture. Never use tension shoe trees because they may stretch the leather out of shape. Instead of drying the outside of shoes by rubbing, which may roughen the wet leather, pat with a soft cloth. Fast drying with heat makes leather shrink, harden, or crack.

Work or play shoes that do not need polishing may be softened and made moisture resistant by rubbing with beeswax, deer oil, tallow, or petroleum jelly. Well oiled shoes not only turn off moisture but also last longer. Outdoor work shoes or children's shoes which have hardened after getting wet may be softened by rubbing with warm neat's foot oil, castor oil, or tallow. To make soles moisture resistant, set shoes in a pan with just enough warm oil to cover the soles and let stand 15 minutes.
Caution: Never let oil get on rubber heels or soles because it rots the rubber.
Suede shoes should be thoroughly dry before they are brushed or rubbed. Use a rubber sponge or stiff brush, never a wire brush because it may damage soft suede. After brushing spread on liquid suede dressing in one direction. When dry, brush in opposite direction to lift the nap.

Oregon gasoline sales went over the 300 million gallon level in the first nine months of the year to top the 1946 record for the same period by 13 percent. Secretary of State Earl T. Newbry has announced.
Showing steady month-by-month gains since January, sales reached an all-time peak in August as pumps throughout the state recorded over 43 million gallons. September gas use eased off to 42 million gallons but led sales for September of 1946 by more than 14 percent. Officials said taxes on sales so far this year have netted the state treasury $14 million.
Consumption for the remaining months of 1947 is expected to stay at high levels with winter traffic volumes heaviest in history. Safety men said this means the danger of a climb in traffic deaths due to bad weather accidents is increasingly grave, underscoring the need for
