As Old AS Business Itself

Advertising is not something merely associated with the modern version of business. It is as old as business itself. Advertising was carved on tablets of stone; it was give nexpression by the town crier centuries before radio came upon the air; it was laboriously written on sheets of parchment before the advent of movable types.

Invention of the printing press and the adoption of movable type in printing gave advertising its first real boost. Since that time many forms of advertising have developed, some of them giving the printed word stiff competition, but today, in spite of inroads made by competitive forces, newspaper advertising stands out as the most efficient service in establishing markets, or in putting your message over to the public.
