For a row crop, apply one-half o one pound of ammonium sulphate per 100 feet of row. Amonium sulphate or any other form of nitrogen fertilizer will serve the purpose. If straight ni rogen fertilizers are not availhowever, use a complete fertilizer stepping up the appliation. King states that fertilizer sidedressings should be placed in a hallow trench that is dug so the fertilizer material will lie within wo or three inches of the plants.

Most obvious signs of a shortage of nitrogen, according to King, are the absence of vigorous plant growth and poor color. Sus-pect a shortage of nitrogen, King idvises, in gardens where growth s poor but where in other years umper crops have grown. Leaf ellowing is also an indicator of itrogen lack.

To tell the nitrogen content of a fertilizer, King offers this sugen possession. The Fairchilds gestion: Commercial fertilizers are frequently spoken of, for example, as 6-10-4. The first number in all cases is the percentage of nitrogen contained in the mixture. The second and third num bers are phosphate and potash content, respectively. Oregon ferilizer labeling laws require that the amounts of all three ingre dients be plainly marked on all Late planted gardens may also e disappointing on soil that is naturally fertile and which orlinarily produces good gardens without fertilizer. The natural upply of nitrogen has not had a hance to become available in nany of these cases. A dose of rned after similar associations fertilizer at planting time in addition to a side-dressing later will prove helpful.
