Washington Week

By CHARLES L. EGENROAD
Washington, D. C.—The 31 members of the 80th Congress who co-authored the resolution calling for an explanation of Russian violations of agreements with this country are wondering if President Truman's "get tough" policy with Russia isn't just another plea for votes.

In San Francisco, the President called for an end to Soviet obstruction and aggression, declaring that "we refuse to play fast and loose with man's hope for peace."
He said that if the Russians want peace they "can prove it" in Greece and Korea.
Mr. Truman failed to mention that Russia might prove its willingness to assure peace by proper action in Poland. After all, Mr. Truman was a party to the Potsdam Conference where Soviet-American agreements were finally approved.

This is the agreement which Mr. Truman told Congress was violated in Poland:
"The three powers note that the Polish provisional government . . . has agreed to hold free and unfettered elections, as soon as possible on the basis of universal suffrage and secret ballot, in which all democratic and anti-Nazi parties shall have the right to take part and to put forward candidates . . ." (Potsdam Agreement, August 2, 1945).

The President's explanation of the violation as sent to Congress says:
"On several occasions prior to the elections and following persistent reports of reprehensible methods employed by the Government (Polish) against the democratic opposition, this Government (U. S.) reminded the Polish provisional government of its obligation under the Yalta and Potsdam Agreements and was joined on these occasions by the British Government.
"On January 5, 1947, the British and Soviet governments were asked to associate themselves with this government in approaching the Poles on this subject and the British government made similar representations to the Soviet government . . . in calling for a strict fulfillment of Poland's obligations.
"The Soviet government refused to participate in the proposed approach to the Polish government. The British and American representatives were summarily rejected by the Polish government as 'undue interference' in the internal affairs of Poland."
The elections were in January, 1947. How tough did Mr. Truman get as a result of this violation? His State Department at that very moment, and since, approved the shipping of millions of dollars in materials to Russia under Lend-Lease for which Russia has made no move to pay.
And Mr. Truman's State Department recently announced that the "objectionable" government of Poland will be recognized for shipments of coal.
Meanwhile, what of the Poles—our former Allies—and the Four Freedoms promised them?
