News From C. A. Office

A forage harvester or field chopper will bring more returns to a farmer than the investment in any other piece of major farm equipment with the single exception of the tractor, believes M. G. Huber, O.S.C. extension agricultural engineer.

The forage harvester with its companion units—blower or elevator and automatic unloading attachment for wagons and trucks—solves many of the mechanization headaches related to harvesting forage crops. By using the field chopper method of haying, grass is cut, chopped and blown into a wagon or truck equipped with a mechanical unloading device in the field. At the barn, the chopped grass is blown into a silo and stored as ensilage.

"This method is economical—both in a saving of harvest labor and feeding value of the forage. Rain is never a serious handicap," Huber states.

The forage, harvest chopping outfit is an all season machine, as it is used successively, starting with the first silage crop, through pasture clipping and later hay and straw chopping. In all of these operations, the operating cost per ton of dry matter from field to cow is lowest when the forage harvester is used in comparison with all other methods of haying. By making ensilage of forage crops, using the field chopper, a 10 to 30 percent increase is gained in the total amount of digestible nutrients for any given acre of land, studies have shown.

If a cow can live on grass containing 80 percent water during the spring and summer while giving her best milk production, the next best substitute is grass silage containing 65 percent moisture, Huber states. Food elements are found in grass silage in almost the same proportions and amounts as in grass.

MOWER ADJUSTMENT AND REPAIR BULLETIN ISSUED
To those farmers who're having their troubles making their mowers work right this haying season, here's some good news.

M. G. Huber, the Oregon State College agricultural engineer, has just completed a new illustrated bulletin on how to repair and adjust the farm mower.

It's extension bulletin number 6-8-6, entitled, "The Mower—How to Repair and Adjust."

By use of drawings, Huber shows how to adjust mower parts and correct the common troubles that come up in mower operation. Among the items covered in the bulletin are excessive draft, side draft, breakage of the knife, uneven cutting, choking of the cutter bar and lost motion.

The bulletin is now ready for distribution through your county agricultural agent's office.

Value of Recording Military Discharges Proved at Vanport
The value to war veterans of recording their military discharges in the county court house was poignantly brought out by the recent Vanport disaster, where countless numbers of these documents are presumed to have been lost, the Oregon department of veteran's affairs said this week.

For those veterans who had recorded their discharges, there should be no delay in applying for GI benefits or other rights to which they may be entitled, because photostats may be obtained easily from the county recorder. These are bona fide copies and can be used for virtually all occasions where proof of military service is required.

Those who neglected to have their discharges recorded will find it necessary to apply for a certificate in lieu of lost discharge, which usually results in considerable delay because the applications must be processed in Washington, D. C.

Approximately 2600 veteran families were flooded out at Vanport, besides many in other lowland areas. While no one knows how many lost their discharges in the disaster, nor how many had neglected to record their discharges, it is assumed by counselors in the Portland office of the department of veterans' affairs that hundreds were caught short, judging from the numbers applying daily for certificates in lieu of lost discharge papers.

There is no charge, in any county in Oregon, for recording discharge certificates, and veterans are urged to take advantage of this service because it provides a permanent record of military duty and makes it easy to obtain copies when circumstances demand swift service.

Bob Runnion Jr. of Eugene spent the week end in Heppner with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. V. Runnion.

Mrs. Ambrose Chapin and Mrs. Charles Dodge Jr. and son Michael motored to Pendleton Thursday, July 4, at 12 o'clock.
