Beauty of Mt. Rainier Imposing Motorloggers Find on Park Trip

This is a continuation of a motorlog series... The Oregon State Motor Loggers Association... The trip was headed north, crossed the Columbia river at Portland...

DEAR BOB: This will serve as a reminder of your long-anticipated but long-delayed visit to the Pacific Northwest. As you can see, the reminder is rather public; and, with approximately one million persons having access to this communication, I'd best refrain from rattling family skeletons at either end of the line.

To the business at hand, then, which is to outline a journey you will assuredly wish to take when your family's Pacific Northwest visitation materializes. The trip affords truly remarkable variety. It requires two full days, spans 600 miles, crosses the Cascade mountains by way of Mt. Rainier National park, continues into the irrigated lands and the sage lands of Washington state, and makes a return loop to Portland by way of the Columbia gorge.

Right now—in August—Oregon and Washington justify most the superlatives bandied so carelessly in travel folders and motorlog articles. It was, therefore, an appropriate time and a fortuitous occasion when our motorlog party, headed by Ray Conway, manager of the Oregon State Motor Association, set forth a few days ago on a trail-blazing junket.

To get to the park we headed north, crossed the Columbia river at Portland into the state of Washington, continued north through rolling country via U. S. 99 to a little place called Mary's Corner, then turned east toward Mount Rainier and its parent range, the Cascade mountains.

Of all Cascade peaks, Rainier commands the superlatives. It is the highest, 14,408 feet; with 26 glaciers, offers 40 square miles of ice and the greatest glacier system in continental United States. Rainier is by far the largest northwest mountain, surpasses in the beauty of its mountain meadows, and is said to have the loveliest alpine flowers in the world.

As for beauty, there is considerable difference in opinion, among northwest students, as to which of the Cascade snow peaks takes the accolade. There is enough beauty in all of them, but certainly Rainier is the most impressive. Its beauty is of the formidable sort.

Coming into Rainier park, the motorist passes abruptly from farm lands and cut-over lands into the dense lowland forest where Western hemlock, Douglas fir and Western red cedar perpetually shroud the sun. The road climbs up the sides of valleys long since gouged by glaciers and in a leisurely hour reaches Paradise valley, 5557-foot altitude, where the principal resort facilities are located. These include an inn and a lodge and camping places.

One needs impressive vistas of Rainier on the route to Paradise—but the finest views of all, for the lazy motorist, are found by taking a short walk above Paradise. Great Nisqually glacier, a living thing of creeping blue ice, looms directly above. You are standing in a mountain meadow replete with quickly falling rivulets running through groups of alpine fir and mountain hemlock. And to complete the picture are lush growths of heathers and wild flowers, avalanche lilies, mountain buttercups, lupine and a host of others.

Don't forget the North Morrow County fair at Boardman September 9, 10 and 11. There were many blue ribbon exhibits at our fair last week that would be worthy of exhibiting at Boardman.

Kenneth Smouse, Ione, is the first grower of certified seed wheat to complete certification on his Rex-M-1 wheat grown this year. Bin inspection, the final inspection in completing certification was made and a blue tag gave grade to him by Oregon State college. This Rex seed passed a purity test with 99.85 per cent pure seed with no crop seed or weed seed present. 0.15 per cent inert matter in the sample consisted of chaff and broken seeds.

Several farmers have called at the office in regards to the market for crested wheat grass harvested this year. The county agent has requests from several seed companies wanting to buy this seed. Price quotations range from 17 to 24 cents a pound depending on quality of the seed. Anyone having crested wheat grass for sale should get a purity and germination test on the seed.
