

GRADE C MILK PERMITTED IN SHORTAGE AREAS BUT MUST MEET STANDARDS

Consumers in a number of sections in Oregon will be using grade C milk for the next several months because the supply of grade A milk is not nearly adequate to take care of the demand. O. K. Beals, chief of the division of foods and dairies of the state department of agriculture, said today.

At the same time Beals declared that the grade C milk now entering the market in various places in Oregon is wholesome and that actually it is far better than considerable of the market milk that was used during the war. The use of C grade milk on Oregon markets is now permitted under regulations promulgated by the department and which went into effect on November 1. The regulations were drawn following hearings last June.

The department official points out that under the new state regulations, when grade A or grade B milk is materially short of supplying the needs of any given market—as it now is in the Lane county area and in a number of other sections of the state—the department will permit grade C milk to go on that market.

Grade C milk, however, must meet certain definite requirements set up by the department. These standards are considerably higher than the standards used for milk entering the factory channels. Moreover, grade C milk must be pasteurized.

Mr. Beals points out that in efforts to see that there is a sufficient supply of healthful milk for Oregon residents, the department has now permitted the sale of three grades of milk, grade A, grade B and grade C for fluid use, but each bottle or container sold must be marked with the true grade of the milk. Requirements for grade C milk are not as stringent at the dairy level as are those for grade A milk. But grade C raw milk for pasteurization must be produced on dairy farms approved by the division, must have a bacterial plate count of more than 500,000 per milliliter, must be free of off flavors and must meet a sediment requirement. When this milk is pasteurized it must contain not more than 50,000 bacteria per milliliter and must bear a grade C label.
