

Wheat Commission Starts Ball Rolling On Research Projects

During the first two years the Oregon Wheat commission started the ball rolling on more than $125,000 worth of projects designed to alleviate the Northwest wheat problem and for its efforts won the unanimous endorsement of the Oregon Wheat Growers' League. By contributing $22,497.53, the commission stimulated research on wheat quality, the assembling of basic statistics and an analysis of freight rate problems and has participated in educational activities to show the value of Oregon wheat.

Most of the Oregon contribution is being spent for research, education and publicity—areas of foremost concern to the Wheat Commission in its continuous search to secure for Oregon growers the best possible return for their wheat.

In addition to promoting research and educational activities the commission has devoted much of its time to meeting current problems of Oregon producers, such as needed adjustments in rail and water transportation rates, urging prompt settlement of the maritime strike and analysis of the International Wheat Agreement. Commission members and the administrator also have helped Washington and Idaho growers in developing plans for wheat commissions in those states.

Recognizing that little could be accomplished by working alone, the commission has stressed cooperation with other agencies. By such cooperation and pooling

We Both Won This One

Blew my top the other morning when I discovered a shirt I'd put on had two buttons missing.

"Joe," the missus says, "do you ever read what you write? For a man who writes newspaper pieces all about tolerance, you sometimes show a lot of race prejudice."

"Race prejudice!" I hollers. "No one can accuse me of that." "I mean prejudice against the entire human race," she interrupts with a smile. "Why get mad at the world over two little buttons? That took the wind out of me."

From where I sit (as I told the missus that evening), a lot of us sometimes get too worked up over little things... little differences of opinion or taste. One person prefers beer or ale, another prefers cider or lemonade. But why criticize the other fellow just because his tastes aren't the same as ours? "That sounds more like you, Joe," she laughs, snipping off a thread. (It so happens she was sewing on buttons.)

ments wheat growers will be receiving next week are meant for them.

The Oregon Wheat commission is mailing to every Oregon wheat producer a copy of the biennial report prepared for Governor Douglas McKay. To catch the busy man's eye before he tosses it away, the envelope has "Wheat Report" printed on it in large letters.

"All growers in the state have a direct financial interest in the Oregon Wheat commission," Administrator Ed Bell explained, "and it is our desire and our duty to see that all wheat producers are informed as to the activities of the commission."

pared enough copies, Bell said, so that each grower would have the opportunity to get a complete picture of the problems faced by the commission in carrying out its major objective—figuring out the most profitable uses for surplus Northwest wheat. A financial accounting in the report will tell the grower just what happens to that one-half cent a bushel tax that he pays on each bushel sold into commercial channels.

funds, the state will receive benefits from $83,500 worth of research on wheat uses and marketing. The Wheat Commission is contributing $8,500 to these programs.

Chemists are working for Oregon in experimental laboratories in Peoria, Ill., Albany, California and Pullman, Washington. They are trying to determine the chemical properties of wheat, information essential to the development of new uses and better varieties for different purposes.

A marketing study to determine uses made of Northwest wheat in domestic and foreign markets and the possibilities of expanding those markets was begun September 1.

In the educational field the commission has spent $2,997.53 participating in fat livestock shows, cake baking contests, a scholarship fund and exhibits.

To help fight freight rates which discriminate against Northwest wheat, the commission has contributed $11,000 to a $28,000 war chest.

Among future projects contemplated by the commission are an analysis of export markets and an analysis of industrial possibilities. The commission proposes to find out what kinds of wheat and flour best fit the eating habits of people in other countries and what those countries have to exchange which will be needed here.

Once this growing and marketing information is compiled, the commission may point the way toward a regional market. The wheat in all states in the northwest are vitally concerned with routing themselves of wheat surplus.

Time to Save Electricity!

4:30 to 6:30 every workday evening!

The whole Pacific Northwest faces a breakdown in electric service unless you... and you... and you... help save electricity. The situation will be serious everywhere in this fast-growing region until big new power plants can be finished. The problem is especially bad on these early winter evenings when lights go on everywhere while stores and factories are still operating. All power systems are strained to capacity from 4:30 to 6:30 workday evenings. Please save electricity during these hours, every way you can.
