Indians and 'Old Spain' Provide Charm of Arizona, New Mexico

This is a condensation of a motoring article appearing in the Sunday Gregorian May 29, one of a series approximate by The Oregonian and the Oregon State Motor association

WE WANTED sunshine. The chill of an "unusual" winter still lingered in our bones and in the bronchii of our youngest child who, opined the family doctor, might get at least tem-porary relief from the asthma under the Southwest sun.

porary relief from the asthma under the Southwest sun. That is why we embarked on a 4055.7-mile motorlog, encom-passing most of the West, for The Oregonian and the Oregon State Motor association. We entered New Mexico's high desert, smack into the Navajo Indian reservation. This was typically southwest country. Mile after mile of plateau, 6000 feet up in the cloudless sky, looked like walled cities of a bygone race of giants. Color was rampant—cobalt sky, towering rock masses shading from orange to purple. Hogans spotted the desert, miles from the nearest habita-tion, invariably without any sign of available water. Occasion-ally we saw a Navajo boy or girl in colorful tribal costume herding sheep near the high-way, or passed an Indian trad-ing post with a few Navajos souatting in the sun. A few hours later, we dropped down a short slope into old world Spain. The sign on the bridge over a shallow discolored stream mid "Rio Puerco"—Pig rive.

dedicated to tourists and health seekers-with just enough sup-port from surrounding cattle ranches to balance its economy. For us, there were two out-standing points of interest in the city-the University of New Mexico, its dun-colored adobe buildings sprawled in architec-tural perfection just beyond the shopping district, and the bril-liantly-costumed Navajo Indians who made up a good share of pedestrian traffic.

Our next stop was Isleta Pueblo, 15 miles south of Albu-querque, where Hopi Indians have lived continuously for over 1000 years. Here, everything was adobe—including fences-some of it in ruins, some of it streamlined to resemble modern

From Isleta, we took the southern route through New Mexico to Tucson, Ariz, where motels boasted swimming pools and myriad signs proclaimed it a paradise for asthmatics.

Colorad After hundreds of miles of low sage, the green ocolillo shrubs, mesquite and towering snguaro cactus quickened our Cortez iterest.

Phoenix was pleasant, but hot and dusty, so we left it for the Grand Canyon. The next morning, after one farewell look at the Grand Canyon, we headed for the Mojave desert and home, via central California. Scenically, it was a very satis-fying trip—especially Arizona. Culturally, it was even more so. Far more than the northwest, the southwest is steeped in its own traditions. Its modern his-tory goes back nearly 350 years:

One Coast-wide school system is for telephone people only-and better service for the West is the result

2. On stubby poles like these, linemen learn to use their new climbing equipment. This is just one of the more than one hundred courses that telephone people study in towns large and small-up and down the Coast. In 1948, thousands of employees received training. That means thousands of men and women better able to furnish good service to you.

4. Good service for you comes from telephone people who know their jobs. You can help them serve you best by making sure you always have the right number in mind before calling, leaving a little time between calls, giving the called person time to answer.

1. As this young lody learns to use a training switchboard, she'll also learn many things that will be mighty important to good service. All through her training she'll see how operators make courtesy and helpfulness a normal part of their jobs. And the same spirit is present as other telephone people learn their new skills.

3. On-the-job-training here in the West is typified by this "student" who is learning the workings of a trouble indicator frame-an automatic detective that constantly makes sure the lines on its "beat" are giving good service. Even experienced employees take refresher courses like this to keep up-to-date . . . and keep learning their way up the ladder.
