SUCCESS COMES MINT-FLAVORED
Meet Mr. and Mrs. William Towery, Stayton mint growers, and their five husky sons. From left—Billy, Jimmy, Richard, Mrs. Towery, Mr. Towery, Maxey and Marion. The ambitious Towerys earned farming success in Oregon, after 14 disappointing years elsewhere. "We reached the North Santiam area almost broke in 1939," Towery said. "The First National Bank helped us buy our 52-acre 'home place' and, later, 80 acres near Jefferson." Today these Oregon-building ranches yield 100 acres of quality mint annually for distillation into flavoring. They also produce many vegetable crops—and steady jobs for five non-family workers.

IRIS BULBS REWARD HOBBYIST
Twenty-five years ago, at the age of 57, Ben C. Offins (center) retired from lumbering to enjoy his hobby of raising Dutch irises. Soon his acre of land in Grants Pass was crowded with these white, yellow and blue flowers. Florists began buying the bulbs for force-blooming purposes. Now 82, Offins, with his sons, Harold W. (left) and Don A., directs modern iris culture on 30 acres of land—growing approximately 8,000,000 quality bulbs annually. Their firm, B. C. Offins & Sons, relies on the Grants Pass Branch of First National for helpful banking services.

BUILDING OREGON TOGETHER

THE DILLARDS PROVIDE HOUSING
W. H. Dillard began building a small home in 1938 on an acre plot on Prineville's outskirts. Dillard, then a sawmill worker newly arrived from Oklahoma, hardly had the job started before he had rental inquiries. "If folks want places like these, let's build more," Dillard suggested to his wife, Violet. Today they own nine acres, 18 low-rental houses, a 27-place trailer park and room to build a modern tourist court. "We really started on a shoe-string," Dillard says, "and we credit the First National of Prineville for much of our success. We got both financial help and sound business advice."

Oregonians are energetic and resourceful. The enterprises pictured here show typical examples. In each case individuals have bettered themselves—by developing a business, farm or service.
Many other people like these, all working together—family by family, farm by farm and business by business—help build Oregon jobs and opportunities for each of us.
Banks in the First National Group help build Oregon by providing convenient and helpful banking services. Tell us how we can best help you.
