Hunting Territory An Asset

To the man, or woman, with a yen to knock over a deer with a well placed bullet, hunting is a sport from which is derived a generous amount of pleasure. Hunters spend no small amount of time and a considerable amount of money assembling their equipment. Additional expense is incurred in getting to and from the hunting grounds, to say nothing of the food bills. It is all gambled on the possibility that they may return with the coveted buck.

Local business houses more directly affected look upon the annual hunting season as a "shot in the arm." The influx of hunters from outside districts brings a noticeable increase in sales. It is felt in the restaurants, the food stores, sporting goods establishments, and by the dispensers of gasoline and oil. A partial check-up on the number of deer tags sold to date this season shows that upwards of 700 hunters made purchases. While local hunters figure strongly in these figures, those handling the sale of licenses and tags in Heppner report many outside buyers.

Another influx of hunters will be due with the opening of the bird season, and still more during elk season.

It is hardly necessary to bring up the benefits derived from the game life of the region. That is apparent to anyone who will take the time to give it a little thought. From a commercial standpoint it is proving to be a good thing even in the absence of a concerted effort to attract people this way. This particular region has not been heralded far and wide as a hunter's paradise, yet each season hundreds of nimrods come this way. If we want to cash in still stronger without indulging in a directed effort it would not be out of the way to place signs here and there on the main highways calling attention to our hunting grounds. A sign of this type at Heppner Junction, as an example, would be read by many hunters and doubtless would divert a considerable number of them this way.

An Opportunity For Service

Efforts of the Boy Scout Council to reorganize the Cub Scouts are being handicapped by a lack of volunteer leaders. The council and the potential cubs are anxious to get underway but can't complete organizational work until some mothers come forth and offer their services as leaders.

Any organization is as good as its leadership. In the case of an organization as youthful as the Cub Scouts it is highly important that people who know boys guide them in their club work. Mothers are best fitted for this task and in the present situation the Scout Council is having difficulty in convincing them of that fact.

Since the youth of today will be the leaders of tomorrow it should be considered a privilege to help mould the character of these young citizens, directing them along channels of good citizenship and a better understanding of the principles upon which Scouting is founded.
