FERTILIZE NEW GRASS SEEDINGS

Fertilizer used on new grass seedlings of perennial grass for pasture or for seed is good-stand insurance. Fertilizer used at the planting time returns the grower more dividends than that used at any other time. The first requirement for a good grass seeding is a good stand. The second is a thrifty, fast growing plant that will withstand the rough winter weather and be ready for an early start next spring toward making a seed crop or producing feed. Commercial nitrogen fertilizer helps with both points. Young seedlings require a generous amount of immediately available nitrogen in the soil. During the cool fall weather, the supply of available nitrogen that the plant can use is low even on rich soils. Without nitrogen the young seedlings may sprout and die, resulting in the loss of a stand. If the plants have commercial nitrogen available, they will live and keep on growing until freezing weather. Fertilized plants ordinarily will be large enough to withstand heavy freezes. Often unfertilized seedlings are completely lost with one or two mild freezes. Use at least 20 pounds of nitrogen per acre. Thirty or 40 may be better on less fertile soils.

On some soils, particularly in the hills, phosphorous may be necessary in addition to nitrogen, especially if the seeding does not include a legume. The application of phosphorous at seeding time should supply 60 pounds or more of available phosphorous.

Fertilized seedlings, because of the more vigorous early growth, result in cleaner stands. They outgrow the weeds.

Fertilizer will not take the place of a good seed bed and good seed. All three are necessary.

MASTITIS ON UPSWING

Number of cows rothered with an old dairy problem, mastitis, or garget, is again on its seasonal upswing. Barometer to cow numbers troubled with mastitis, an udder infection, is the customary increase in letter queries written to an O.S.C. dairy specialist. Mastitis appears to become more prevalent as the pasture season tapers off and cows are kept more closely confined. Mastitis is an abnormal condition of a cow's udder which results in stringy, flakey, watery or thickened milk. It is accompanied by an average reduction in milk flow of 20 per cent or so. Udders of infected animals may be swollen, inflamed, and usually have a hard, meaty feeling. Often repeated questions are: Is mastitis contagious? What causes it? Answer to the first question is an unqualified "yes". Mastitis is a contagious and 80 to 90 percent of the cases are caused by bacteria—streptococcus agalactiae. These common bacteria usually become established in a cow's udder as a result of injury caused by improper milking or as the aftermath of bruising. Milk from infected cows is not good for human consumption. It may, however, be fed to calves if care is taken to see that calves do not suckle each other and transmit the bacteria to their mammary glands. Milking machines are a frequent source of mastitis infection when they are allowed to run on cows longer than necessary. Time requirement for machine milking will average about four minutes. Feeling that mastitis prevention is more important than cure, this five-step control program is suggested: One, prevent udder injuries; two, test for mastitis at least four times yearly if the disease is prevalent; three, segregate infected animals and milk them last; four, use a chlorine solution to wash udders, another one in which to dip teat cups, and five, practice clean, rapid milking.
