

An Important Morrow County Industry

In this day of co-ops, and various types of combines, it is a source of satisfaction to Morrow county people to have an independent creamery operating successfully and filling the demand for that type of service in the community. W. C. Cox, proprietor, has built the business up from a small beginning to one of the outstanding enterprises of the county—and MCC products are sought after by people depending on this source of revenue for their livelihood.

Wranglers On Parade

One of the most active organizations of the community is the Morrow County Wranglers club. Horse lovers to the last one, this group of men, women and youngsters carry out an active program throughout the year. Early each June there is the Hey Day, a sort of amateur rodeo in which there are thrills and spills. Comes county fair and rodeo time, the Wranglers are out in full strength to help in the arena and to add color and numbers to the parade. At the last fair and rodeo they served a cowboy breakfast to several hundred rodeo visitors. They will serve breakfast Saturday morning to visitors here attending the Oregon Wheat League Convention.

A Champion 4-H Club Steer

One of the features of 4-H club work is the basis of equality upon which the girls and boys are recognized. If that were not the case, we would not see Reita Graves and her champion Shorthorn steer pictured above. Reita won at the Morrow county fair and took her prize animal to the Pacific International Exposition at Portland where she lost the grand championship by a close score. This county has a history of Shorthorn production that dates back more than a half century, when the Mountain Valley Shorthorn ranch, owned by the late W. O. Minor produced animals that won top honors in many of the larger expositions and state fairs throughout the nation.
