CATTLE GRUB TIME

It is not too late to spray for cattle grubs, reminds N. C. Anderson, county agent, even though a recommendation to make the first application on January 25 was made in a circular letter sent to all livestockmen on January 19. Cold weather has slowed up the emergence of grubs but they are now emerging rapidly. Control recommendations are the same as in past seasons with Rotone being the only insecticide recommended. It may be applied as a dust, a wash, or a spray, using a pressure of about 400 pounds. The spray method is the most popular in Morrow county with the hand methods, dust or wash, being used for dairy animals or small beef herds. The spraying should be done some time early in the day so that the cattle can dry before nightfall. The need for cattle grub control is substantiated by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, that show the grubs cause a loss of from 50 to 100 million dollars annually. This loss represents wasted meats trimmed from grubby carcasses and the loss in damaged hides.

Not all ranchers are aware that they are being penalized when selling their grubby animals. We have first-hand information, states the county agent, showing that grubby cattle normally suffer a price concession of about 50 cents per hundred weight. There have been many instances when grubby cattle do not receive a bid until late in the day and are often penalized as much as $1.00 per hundred. This loss to the cattle industry can be avoided by grub treatment which will probably cost you between five and six cents per head, per treatment for materials.
